TRAGEDY AND HOPE OF A EUROPEAN CITY

On a 1:1 scale, the DRESDEN 1945 Panorama depicts the city of Dresden in the aftermath of the bombing raids in February 1945.

From the 15-metre high visitors' platform in the interior of the Panorama, the extent of the destruction wrought is revealed to the observer as from the Town Hall tower over 75 years ago. Dresden, however, not only embodies a tragedy but also hope. The city indeed represents a pioneering example for rebirth, exhibiting thereby an irrepressible will to survive. The issues of development, destruction and reconstruction are broached in an accompanying exhibition. Whilst a 20-minutes-film with historical witnesses looks at the city's urban development and provides a moving insight into Dresden's journey in becoming the city it is today after the devastating air raids of 1945.

PANOMETER DRESDEN

Embark on a once in a lifetime journey through Dresden's past and experience the town as a 360° panorama, all just a short distance away from the renowned Großer Garten. The 27-metre tall circular masterpiece created by Yadegar Asisi has been a gem of insider knowledge among Dresden museum and exhibition experts since 2006.

Displayed in a former gasometer, audio-visual effects have been employed to make the unique panoramas come to life as the images change from day to night. You can also experience the city from a 1:1 view on a 15-metre tall tower where the city looks as real as ever.
